The Secretary of the Treasury Talks About Silver

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE DINNER

Secretary Windom's Death Recalled A Discussion of the Silver Issue from a Bi Metallic Standpoint

New York Nov 17 The members of the [illegible] of commerce celebrated the 123d anniversary of that organization with a grand banquet at Delmonico's tonight It was at this banquet one year ago that Secretary Windom suddenly died President Smith called the guests to order and in a brief speech introduced the Hon Charles Foster secretary of the treasury who spoke substantially as follows

I maintain parity between gold and silver as the fixed policy of the government because we all recognize its supreme importance, but when we come to the question of what policy is the best to pursue to maintain this desired condition serious differences of opinion arise We are all compelled to admit that we have learned something by the experience of the past sixteen years on the subject of silver Prior to 1873 we had many thinking people who believed that our financial structure should be based on gold alone It is now agreed on all sides that gold alone furnishes too narrow a basis upon which to conduct the money affairs of the world Fifteen years ago people who were supposed to understand the question of finance indulged in the prophecy as to the fall that would follow the coinage of four and a half millions silver dollars per month. I voted for this measure, I confess, with great misgivings. I now say frankly that if it had been proposed to coin 400,000,000 of silver dollars in one year and I had voted no and yet I did vote for so vast a sum of silver dollars. We have coined not only 400,000,000 but have reached the sum of 400,000,000 of silver dollars. We have besides, purchased $54,000,000 of silver bullion at equal value and paid for it with an issue of $80,000,000 of new treasury notes, yet the parity is maintained The question I consider now is what policy will put in the least strain on our resources and will require the least resort to the exercise of those extraordinary powers conferred on those in authority to maintain the parity of gold and silver. In my opinion with all our power natural and conferred, with all of our resources applied to their full extent we cannot maintain parity of the two metals if the policy of free coinage of silver is to prevail. [Applause.] I am firmly of the opinion that the parity of these metals can be maintained under the present policy The present indications are that the balance of trade with foreign nations during the next two years at least will require gold shipment to us to pay the balance in our favor of silver to be purchased at its value in new treasury notes Under such conditions the work of maintaining the parity will not require the exercise of the extraordinary resources of power Even if the balance of trade should turn against us, which seems to me quite improbable I believe we would [illegible] the strain and preserve parity. But under free coinage silver would take the place of gold in settling balances. If the price of silver were advanced from [illegible] to $1.29 all the silver of all the world would be directed to this country. To maintain parity under such conditions would be a task requiring more than our vast resources. In my opinion the practical question for you to consider is which of these two policies do you prefer? I know you have expressed a desire for the repeal of the present law, and as I understand it, you propose to substitute a law of any kind In other words you propose that silver will take care of itself I have not given much thought to this phase of the subject, because I don't believe congress will endorse it. But I think I can clearly see that if the government goes out of the market the price will drop, as there is not the large decline, in which even the task of maintaining the parity will be embarrassing and difficult. Believing that the good sense of the business world in the near future must bring us into harmony with us on the proposition that gold alone is too narrow a basis which to build the world's financial structure I have much hope that the best thought of all concerned will create a better and more extended use of silver to be secured by international agreements by which the parity of the two metals may be preserved.' [Applause.]

The applause which greeted the conclusion of the secretary's address had subsided Mr Smith asked Secretary Foster to define his official powers as to the issuing of treasury notes for gold.

Secretary Foster answered. 'The resumption act confers the authority upon the secretary of the treasury to issue bonds to any extent he may feel called on to do so in order to maintain or to decrease his gold reserve The act of July 14, 1890, commands the preservation of the parity between gold and silver It has always been the custom in this country to pay its obligations in gold, there should there be any trouble about this the present hundred millions of gold reserve and were called out or intrenched upon is within my power, under the law, to issue bonds for gold up to 5 per cent. and I think I can see that reserve fund'

Letters of regret were read from Vice President Morton, Secretary Blaine, George William Curtis, ex President Cleveland, Postmaster general Wanamaker R. B. Hayes, Governor Proctor, Edwin Arnold, Chief Justice Fuller Secretary Noble, Attorney-general Miller Secretary Tracey and Governor Russell of Massachusetts.

Great Fire in St Louis.

St Louis Nov 17 —The most disastrous conflagration that has visited St Louis in many years broke out in the furnace room of the large dry goods house of Penny & Gentle on the southeast corner of Broadway and Franklin avenue about 4:30 this morning The fire spread so rapidly, however, that a general alarm was given which brought out every fire department, but before all the engines had reached Penny & Gentle's, the Sonnenfeld company, the mammoth retail house of the Famous Shoe and Clothing company, occupying the entire block of buildings on Broadway between Franklin avenue and Morgan street, were in flames within two hours all the walls were down and nothing was left but a mass of twisted iron girders

Penny & Gentle's and Sonnenfeld's [illegible] While the fire was at its height it was so intense that the fire department was unable to go on Broadway, hence the front of Crawford's store, including the windows and all the show cases in that part of the store from top to bottom, was badly damaged by the heat causing a loss of probably $50,000.

Across the avenue, opposite Penny & Gentle's, the whole row from Broadway to the alley was very badly damaged. The building occupied by W. H. Bohl hatter, Greenlaw & Bohl Kortkamp & Co., jewelry, Lehning company, and C. Bohl & Co. on Broadway the Franklin on Broadway the Franklin house were gutted. McDonald & Hobbs, G. H. Clements, shoes, furnishing and cloaks millinery, E. Wendel & Co. the Square Dealing Jobbing Co and the Wenman house the loss of which had safely escaped

In the building on Franklin avenue just west of Penny & Gentle's, the general dry goods house of Thomas Brown was destroyed by smoke and water to the extent of $[illegible] Insured

The total loss will no doubt exceed $1,000,000 but reliable figures are not obtainable at this writing John Lynch of the sales corps N. was killed from the effects of the Wenman house and seriously hurt in his leg

At 5:4 p m the walls of the Famous and Sonnenfeld buildings fell into the street with a terrible crash and a moment later the Morgan street walls of the Famous fell A squad of firemen working in the narrow alley barely escaped being crushed in the falling walls Shortly after 6 o'clock an alarm appeared at the corner of the Wenman house which is directly opposite the Famous on the east side of Broadway In a few moments the roof and upper stories of the large four story building were a mass of flames Before the department could extinguish the fire in the row of stores from the southeast corner of Franklin avenue and Broadway to the middle of the block were badly damaged

The fire throws about 1,200 people out of employment a majority of them being in the service of the Famous company. One life was probably lost and four persons were injured by the fire The whereabouts of Night watchman Jasper, employed by the Sonnenfeld Millinery company have not been discovered and it is thought he was killed Firemen John Lynch and Al Simons were hit on the head and seriously injured by falling rubbish [illegible] necessary to remove them to his home The losses and insurance are as follows Loss on the stock and fixtures of the Famous Shoe and Clothing company $1,100,000, on building $95,000 on stock of Penny & Gentles $200,000, building $40,000 on stock of Sonnenfeld & Co $190,000, on building $25,000 The insurance is On stock stock owned by the Famous $700,000 on building $40,000 on stock owned by Penny & Gentles $140,000 on building $30,000 on Sonnenfeld's stock $190,000, on building $30,000 Miner house will make a loss of $35,000

Wrangles and Scandals.

Indianapolis, Nov. 16.—The opening meetings to-day have been something of a disappointment to the Alliance leaders and equally so to the third party men. The attendance has not been what was expected, nor the enthusiasm so great. Conflicts of opinion have arisen on practical subjects which threaten to seriously interfere with the work of the farmers' organizations. While the number in attendance is small, the fight for and against the third party movement is none the less bitter. While both the sessions of the F. M. B. A. and Alliance this afternoon were secret it is understood the issue was squarely joined in each, and the results in each case are a drawn battle. The third party people are making the greatest noise and including the Alliance, but the leaders are doing some very effective work, and nothing but the final vote can determine the relative strength of the factions

The attendance at the opening meeting to-night was something less than one thousand and President Polk delivered his annual address. W. S. McAllister of Canton, Miss., chairman of the executive committee of the anti-sub-treasury Alliance, held a committee meeting in the city to-day, its mission being to induce the Alliance to steer clear of the sub-treasury scheme and the third party ideas. McAllister said 'We will present a protest before the Alliance to-morrow against the sub-treasury and third party scheme and against certain irregularities with the order. It is our intention to adjust this matter with in the Alliance if possible, but if we don't get a hearing or if our grievances are not respected, the organization of the anti-sub-treasury Alliance will be extended to every state. In Texas the opponents of the idea do not know the result of our mission We have already organized and the anti-sub-treasury Alliance embraces 60 per cent of the total Alliance strength. This sentiment is also strong in California, Kansas, Michigan and Illinois."

The irregularities alluded to above are embraced in the resolution adopted at the anti sub-treasury Alliance convention here in St. Louis in which it was declared "We denounce S. W. McCune, his agents, henchmen and corrupt practices, he is a disgrace to our order and a stench in the nostrils of all honest men who know his corruption and villany."

The above resolution had reference to a charge against McCune for the procuration of a system of Alliance stores for his own use and benefit

The air is thick with rumors to-day that implicate Alliance leaders with certain combinations and relations with the National Industrial Union corporation formerly known as the cordage corporation The state agents held a meeting this morning at the Bates house Rumors afloat to-day also connect certain Alliance leaders with a deal with the Louisiana Lottery company by which a third party was placed in the field in Louisiana

THE CONTRACT LET.

[illegible] Lowest Bidder [illegible] High School

KATE FIELD ON FREE ART

The contract for the new [illegible] High School building was awarded yesterday by the school board [illegible] the lowest bidder for the work, the figures being $[illegible] for the brick work and $[illegible] for plastering, heating and ventilating. It does not include the plastering, light, [illegible] or furniture. Work for the [illegible] will be commenced at once.

The school board has been harassed over the matter for some time, the bids as opened last night varying from [illegible] apart in the amount required. The lowest bidders are well known in this city and have their material here so far as they can. The school board has found that the firm bears an excellent reputation for fair dealing and an inspection of their work in Pueblo shows it to be thoroughly well done. They employ only union labor. The man who will have charge of the work here will be Mr Charles Gauthier an old resident who has returned from Pueblo and will make this city permanently his home. Mr Gauthier has had charge of the building of the Union depot the Mesa hotel, the Bessemer school house and other important buildings in Pueblo and is thoroughly reliable. He has taken the sub contract for the cut stone work himself and Mr W. H. Goslin will do the brick work on a sub contract. Until the bids were opened the difference between having work done by the St Joe firm or by a local contractor is a good deal one and the board states that it did not feel like paying out several thousand dollars of the people's money on sentimental considerations.

A Discussion on Free Art.

Miss Kate Field of Washington, the well known lecturer and writer and editress of Kate Field's Washington, entertained a large and fairly representative audience in the Antlers pavilion last evening in a talk on "Free Art" Miss Field only arrived in the city late the evening before and quite by accident and had not intended to talk here. Miss Field has been prosecuting a crusade through the east in the interest of free trade in works of art, delivering short addresses, collecting money to aid the cause and stirring up artists and others to memorialize their representatives in congress. Miss Field was induced to talk last evening and late in the afternoon bills were circulated stating that the free address would be given under the auspices of the Unity club. The [illegible] to fill the little auditorium of the pavilion.

Rev. Mr Mellen of Unity church, presided in his most gracious and easy manner, and introduced the various speakers, and at the conclusion of Miss Field's remarks the gathering rather took the form of a mass meeting. The audience was composed about equally of ladies and gentlemen. Miss Field was a frequent visitor to Colorado Springs a few years ago and as a public speaker is known here. She is the same bright and witty Kate Field as of those passing years seeming to leave but few traces and her voice is as clear and musical as ever

The speaker gave a history of the present duty on works of art, a tax which the artists do not wish and no one else apparently, but which, like the "old man of the sea," cannot be shaken off Art was on the free list before the war, but at that time a duty of 10 per cent. was placed upon it, and it thus remained until 1883. At that time the artists petitioned to have the duty removed, but instead it was increased to 30 per cent. When Miss Field went to Washington Mr Carroll Beckwith, president of the Art league, asked her services in the cause of free art and she has been doing what she can. Miss Field, in her wittiest vein told of her experience in addressing the committee on ways and means at the time the McKinley bill was being considered. She got the committee to report in favor of free art and it so passed the house, but the senate amended it so that the tax is 15 per cent. This is 5 per cent more than was deemed necessary in war times, and yet the artists do not ask for any protection Art, the speaker declared, is not luxury, but education, and the argument that it is a tax on luxury falls to the ground. Miss Field believes that the next congress will put art on the free list, and to aid the cause she has decided that the idea should be made fashionable Mrs. Harrison has decided to aid the cause and will give a big reception to the artists of the country the coming winter This will be held at the time of a grand convention of artists to be held in Washington this winter This convention has a number of objects, viz To ask for free art, to ask that an art commission be established, etc Miss Field declares that if the artists can do nothing else at the convention they can create a sensation and get the subject talked about. The speaker said that she had been lulled into inaction by the statement of eastern senators that the wild and woolly west had to be appeased and the senators from that section would never vote for free art and there had been a slip in the senate for that reason She desires $5,000 to carry on the work, and before leaving Washington she had secured $1,500 of the sum, $500 of which had been given by western people. Since leaving home she has largely increased the subscription in this same wild and woolly west, and she hopes to raise it all She described her efforts at Minneapolis, Omaha, Salt Lake and Denver In conclusion she asked for petitions to her memorial to congress

Mr Thomas Parrish one of our local artists, was present and in response to a call spoke a few words. He could heartily endorse all that Miss Field had said, he knew it to be the sentiment of artists that the tax is outrageous. Protection as protection to art is a failure and French artists who have done so much for American artists, cannot understand why a government protects an industry that does not wish it. American artists are mortified at the position in which it places them of being afraid to compete with foreigners. Mr. Parrish on behalf of the local artists thanked Miss Field for her words and promised that they would "do duty" to their representatives.

Mr Louis R. Ehrich, who is perhaps our greatest patron of art, and certainly well qualified to speak, was called out He discussed the question of the tariff on paintings largely The Louvre at Paris, had been a splendid speculation although at cost millions, in that artists resorted in Paris seem to lose a portion of their art when taken from their surroundings, and the place has become the great art center. In a like manner New York city is progressing This country could better afford to pay a royalty upon works of real worth than to tax them It is the man who most enjoys a picture who truly possesses it. Mr. Ehrich spoke of the improvement in art as seen in our houses in the last twenty years. He outlined a series of resolutions that were later adopted

Rev Mr Greer made some pleasant and witty remarks regarding his knowledge of art, but was in thorough sympathy with the movement He further illustrated the improvement in art as seen in our illustrated journals

Plenty of Water

New York Nov 17 —A special from Croton Landing N Y to The Commercial Advertiser says Several men employed by a fire works manufacturing concern arrived here this morning for the purpose of making rain They brought with them an outfit of explosives, which were to be fired into the clouds The first was with 200 pounds of explosive Almost immediately after entering the clouds there was a great rift and a perfect deluge of water began falling, such an outpouring as would fill every stream to overflowing with a few hours

The explosion was felt directly across the dam and the torrent of water that fell in such a great quantity in the vicinity of Croton lake and this fall will greatly allay the fears of a water famine which have prevailed for several days past

A Revolutionary Patent.

St Paul, Minn Nov. 17 —The plate glass industry promises to be entirely revolutionized. Robert Speare, a Minneapolis man has just received letters of patent on an invention which according to the claims of the inventor will reduce the cost of making a square foot of plate glass from seventy to ten cents To perfect his idea has cost Mr. Speare twenty years of close study and $50,000 cold cash in making the necessary experiments. His invention consists in rolling the plate of glass on a perpendicular instead of a horizontal surface It is rolled the exact thickness required instead of having to be ground down and polished. It comes out fine polished and free from warts or chills and a surface of stone prevents its being scratched or marred while cooling The rollers turn out two sheets simultaneously and the production is very rapid.

A call has been issued for a Missouri River Improvement convention to be held at Kansas City on Dec. [illegible] and [illegible]. The subject is one which is of great importance to the states lying along the great river, and indirectly concerns all those of the western portion of the country.

We are pleased to note that our charming neighbor Manitou has made complete and systematic arrangements for the extension and improvement of her sewer system. The place is naturally one of the most healthy of the Rocky mountain resorts, and with proper precautions may be kept so. Such improvements may be expensive at first but they always pay in the end. The care that is being exercised by the Manitou and in Colorado Springs in regard to a storage water supply and allied subjects of sanitary science cannot fail to have a most beneficial effect on their future.

A gentleman of this state took sufficient interest in the latest development of the old time scheme for locating precious mineral from the surface to write to Mr Edison about the matter, inclosing newspaper accounts of the alleged discoveries. Mr Edison's reply is characteristically brief and to the point. "Mr Edison agrees with you in thinking that the supposed invention for locating mineral veins of all kinds, referred to in your letter of the 7th inst., is a fraud." Mr Edison's letter does not make it impossible that "there is within five miles of Colorado City, the richest deposit of ore that has ever been found in Colorado, but it is thoroughly consistent with the opinion that the person who said so was making a blind and ridiculous guess equally removed from science and truth.

If the recent rainmakers were able to coax a rain from the arid skies of Kansas and Texas, if, we say, they were able to do this, it is evident enough that similar experiments in the east where the skies are more naturally charged with vapor, ought to produce much greater results. This logic is backed by the story from Croton Landing, N. Y., a town which has a sound of cold water sufficiently ever in the name. According to this, future flood prophets will only need to make arrangements with the cheapest dealers in fireworks to insure their success, and a city's reservoirs may safely be left much less in capacity than the present limit of safety. But at the rate things are going now, it will not be long before there will be a call for a law to stop these interferences with Nature's designs. It may be very nice for New York's reservoirs to be filled up, but who is going to pay for the railway embankments that have been destroyed?

There is sure to be quite a difference of opinion in regard to the contract for the new high school building, but it will be conceded by all that the board has been very careful in the matter. That they have taken plenty of time and have made close investigation before reaching a decision, and that the result of it all is such as they judge best for the interests of the people and the tax payers. The precautions which have been taken to secure the carrying out of the terms of the contract with fidelity and exactness, and the provisions by which the work is to be given to Colorado Springs workmen and the material purchased of Colorado Springs merchants will remove many of the objections which have been made to letting the contract out of the city, and now that the contract has been awarded there ought to be a disposition to give those gentlemen an opportunity to show their good faith. If it was not intended to give the contract out of the city under any circumstances, it was quite unfair to ask for any outside bids. Since the school board has heard all that can be said in the matter and has given the contract to the persons whom, all things considered, they believe to be the cheapest and best [illegible] the presumption is until some evidence is shown to the contrary, that we will have a handsome building a well built building and as cheap a building as is possible.

In accordance with the honored and laudable custom the governor of Colorado has issued his proclamation calling on the people of the state to celebrate Thursday Nov. 26 as Thanksgiving Day. Inasmuch as the governor of the state agrees with the president of the United States in this important matter there is nothing for common people to do but to buy their turkeys and get as much satisfaction out of them as their varying circumstances will permit. Speaking with our personal experience we would say that there is no part of the governor's duty that is less satisfactory than writing a proclamation which most people think ought to be new, but which it is utterly impossible should be. So great is this difficulty that in many cases governors have confined—themselves to an endorsement of the president's proclamation. Governor Routt has not been [illegible] on the other hand he has not gone into a long disquisition on the general affairs. The custom he says is a good one, and ought to be maintained. The year now drawing to a close has been an exceptionally prosperous one. We see around us every evidence of industry and thrift, and the honest efforts of the people, in all classes of labor have met with generous reward. These things together with the health and peace we enjoy, are great causes for sincere thanksgiving. It may be that it will seem to some people, as a rather rosy view of the situation, and it is natural for mankind to hope that however good the past year may have been, the next will be yet better. But still the people of Colorado have had, and have, much to be thankful for and may enjoy their Thanksgiving in all sincerity, according to our straightforward governor's brief proclamation.

The mining congress is receiving attention and getting support in a way that is a surprise even to its best friends. Not only will the representation from Colorado be larger and more complete than in any similar gathering ever held before, but the number of eastern delegates will be much larger than was expected. There will also be some representatives of foreign countries. When it is considered how wide and numerous the representation would be there was some foolish talk about the convention being a place for the interest of certain views of finance, but of late if there is anyone who still holds to that opinion he has enough to keep it to himself. The convention is not called to [illegible] views which are already out at length. Where should be seen in the forade [illegible] full opportunity for the best to be heard. So the results arrive [illegible] weight and will more exactly represent the conditions of a large number of women who are of constantly increasing importance.

WESTERN BREVITIES

The Pueblo Wet Days put.

The discovery of a vein of bituminous anthracite coal near Durango is reported.

Fort Morgan is to have a kite shaped racetrack for the benefit of the army local horse breeders.

The town of Lyons expects next its first [illegible] law. Two saloons were destroyed.

Trinidad has raised $2,000 for the preliminary survey of the proposed Denver and El Paso short line.

The moral atmosphere of Manitou has been cleared by the expulsion of all the professional gamblers.

The editor of the Ouray Plaindealer claims that a local practitioner has cured him of alcoholism by the use of hashish of gold.

A coal vein has been struck near Grand Junction. The contract for a $1,000 opera house has been let there with the effect of livening things up.

The editor of the Rocky Mountain Sentinel has a "snap." The last issue had just one column of reading matter apart from ads, patent nostrums and plate, and that column was contributed.

A Rifle man who had a stoveplate to rivet together finally solved the problem by encircling one of the posts of his veranda with the sheet iron and then fastening the edges together. He is now figuring whether to cut the pipe or the post.

Boulder is determined to enter the winning team at the great drilling contest at the opening of the Denver mining exchange, and to that end all the local entries will have a preliminary contest so that the two best men may be selected.

Willie McGraw, a Leadville 15-year-old, is in the Pueblo insane asylum on account of smoking cigarettes. The reason the average fiend is not affected that way, probably, is because the [illegible] is not enough material for the excessive smoking to work upon.

When it comes to purity of the ballot, we have in this valley a voter who takes the cake. The judges of election gave him a ticket in all its virgin purity and he returned it to the ballot box in just the same way, without X, spot or blemish.—[Deloque Era.

Extraordinary Jumping Feats.

The jumping and pole vaulting feats of our contemporary athletes seem but the work of babes and pygmies when compared with the extraordinary doings of the old time acrobats. If history is to be believed, Phyllus of Crotona could stand and make a fifty six foot jump on the dead level. He was one of the main athletes at the old Olympic games, his enormous jump forming a part of the course of the Pentathlon.

Strutt, the noted English authority on games and amusements speaks of a Yorkshire jumper named Ireland whose powers were something marvelous. He was 6 feet high at the age of eighteen at which time, without the aid of springs or spring board he leaped over nine horses ranged side by side, and at another time lightly cleared a heavy wagon which was covered with an awning.

Colonel Ironsides, who made a voyage from England to India early in the present century, relates that he met in his travels an old white haired man who, with a single bound, cleared the back of an enormous elephant, flanked on either side with six camels of the largest breed.—St. Louis Republic.

The Scenery of New Zealand

It was the variety of New Zealand that struck me most. So far as scenery is concerned we get an approach to it only by combining Switzerland, southern France, Norway and the Yellowstone park—I might throw in the Tyrol and north Italy—into one not very big country. As Switzerland is the point to which tens of thousands of tired men and women converge every summer so shall it be before long with New Zealand. What a godsend the right of it must be to people who have lived on the waterless plains of Australia who have beheld with straining eyes every blade of grass burned down to the roots, and their vast flocks withering away along the line of march from one dried up water hole to another.

Instead of low lying shores, the noble line of the southern Alps, snowy ranges and lofty peaks cut sharp against glaciers [illegible] into the clear air from eight to twelve thousand feet. Instead of a bush with stiff trees or melancholy eucalypts, gaunt, ghostly, stretching out skeleton branches dense green for miles. What a playground for the squatter.—G. M. Grant in Harper's.

Little Food for Babes in Hot Weather

The digestive organs of babies are never strong, and the heat weakens them greatly. The influence alone is quite active enough to cause a severe attack of diarrhoea, and every means should be employed to protect them from it. The need is obvious of extreme caution in feeding babies in hot weather, therefore some restriction of diet are imperative.

Not impossibly they would thrive as well and enjoy much better if [illegible] they given [illegible] during [illegible] three hours. [illegible] times a day. [illegible] was observed for two of the hottest months. That season the [illegible] in question made a wonderful showing having very little cholera infantum and a remarkably low death rate. The officers marveled at the [illegible] and a mistake in feeding.—Boston Herald.

What It Means.

Johnny—Pa, what does the paper mean when it says that Mr Littleton has taken Miss Brown as the partner of his joys and sorrows?

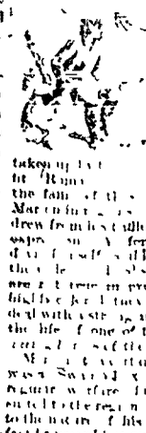
Pa—It means, my son, that they are to enter life upon the share and share alike principle. He will take all the joys and let her have all the sorrows.—Boston Transcript.

MARION, THE SWAMP FOX

THE BOLD CAREER OF SOUTH CAROLINA'S GREAT PARTISAN

He Took Refuge in the Swamps When the Patriot Armies Had Been Driven from the State and Fought on His Own Hook.

[illegible] American Press Association.



WAMPEE FOX. [illegible] nickname of South Carolina's famous Revolutionary [illegible] Little Mac, Fighting Joe [illegible] Civil Billy [illegible] taken up [illegible] Rum [illegible] the fame of the [illegible] Marion [illegible] drew [illegible] supposed [illegible] for three years [illegible] fail [illegible] but catch him [illegible] the [illegible] are [illegible] in press detail or are [illegible] dealt with [illegible] interest and [illegible] the life [illegible] of the [illegible] sublime and [illegible] of the [illegible]

Marion's [illegible] of his career was [illegible] and [illegible] his country's welfare. But his [illegible] in the region of this campaign [illegible] to the main [illegible] of this country. In point of fact he passed but an insignificant part of his life in independent warfare and was almost constantly acting in the regular ranks of the Revolutionary army.

Before the Revolution Marion had distinguished himself as a soldier in the Cherokee war virtually won single handed by leading a forlorn hope of 30 men to storm the key position of the Indian position. After this he served in the provincial congress and later [illegible] organized in his district was [illegible] captain. In the desperate battles [illegible] Charleston [illegible] campaigns of the south from 1779 to 1781 he won promotion step by step until he became colonel and was for a time second in command to Gen. Lincoln the American leader in the south.

By a fortunate accident in Charleston before the British blockade closed around it, he broke one of his legs and went away to his home in the interior and so escaped capture when the city fell May 12, 1780. Other military disasters followed the surrender of Charleston and in a few weeks there was not an armed force of Americans in the field in South Carolina. Meanwhile Marion had recovered from his hurt, and Governor Rutledge placed him in command of a district that was raised to arms against British oppression. The oppression was not imaginary but real. It was not the menace of laws passed away over the sea, but the hand of tyranny felt daily at home. The king's officers, after prevailing upon the inhabitants by peaceful proclamations to lay down their arms as patriots, demanded that they take them up again as British soldiers and fight against their brethren. The people of a large district known as Williamsburgh learning that Marion was under way to head an uprising boldly refused to obey the king's minions and secretly organized four companies under the title of Marion's brigade."

It was this force, afterward increased or depleted according to luck or necessity, that Marion handled with disturbing effect on the British among the swamps of the central river region now his own and now as a lair. With these men dispersed in crises of grave danger and summoned to arms again at the moment of opportunity, Marion cut off supplies from the foreign armies in South Carolina, broke up the haunts of Tory adherents of the hateful rule captured scouting parties and dispatch bearers, and in a dozen ways contributed the enemy that conquest of the southern colonies exhibited to the people.

Marion's brigade and subsidiaries gave the British ample cause to estimate it as a band of outlaws at least simple from a British point of view. The men were not uniformed and were armed with rude weapons their sabers being wrought out of saws taken from mills lying in the country districts. Marion himself had no regimentals until he secured them for the recapture of some supplies at a British post. The warfare he waged was similar to the activity of the Tory guerillas, who backed by the king's forces were guilty of nameless cruelties toward all patriots and their families. Marion's brother was barbarously murdered by Tories who captured him yet the great partisan was slow to retaliate for Tory excesses. In one of his later campaigns long after his brother had been murdered and the Tories had laid waste the homes of patriots who espoused the cause of liberty he interfered to protect Tory prisoners from the vengeance of their captors. While acting in concert with Light Horse Harry Lee a British fort fell into his hands and Marion while at dinner learned that some of Lee's men were hanging certain of the captives. Without stopping for formalities he rushed to the scene of execution and saved the life of one man who was about to be strung up and threatened to kill the principals in the affair should they attempt further reprisals of that nature.

The turning point in Marion's career was his encounter in Snow's Island after several bouts with the enemy that taught them to respect the Swamp Fox and be forever alert and active while in his neighborhood. Snow's Island was a fortress surrounded by water and swamps offering special security against bearing powers to an [illegible] Marion's pathways removed all bridges and ferries from the rivers [illegible] and made his camp on it. He spent now in the Pee Dee [illegible] British [illegible] [illegible] Scout [illegible] that [illegible] of the British [illegible] Marion's sharpshooters cut down the British artillerists on sight and a storming party that tried to storm the pass was followed.

"GO AND ASK HIM FOR THE ANSWER."

But disaster only seemed to rouse Marion's energies. [illegible] return from Sampit he [illegible] Snow's Island [illegible] than [illegible] leaving [illegible] force large enough to drive Watson and the scouting party [illegible] the large territory threatened. [illegible] they had been only [illegible] to run the camp. [illegible] by Doyle who [illegible] over the Wateree to the Lynches [illegible] the scene of Marion's and Watson's encounter and swooped down with [illegible] of less half. Everything of value to the partisans was destroyed stock provisions ammunition and arms. When these news brought this world to Marion's [illegible] no time was lost in an [illegible] and the band [illegible] by [illegible] started to the [illegible] on Doyle. Doyle [illegible] of Lynch's River [illegible] column and the not pursuers and avoid battle although forced to [illegible] punishment from Marion's sharpshooters at long range, and prevailed to retreat toward the British line at Camden with Wateree.

The spirit and genius of 1781 put Marion upon his mettle not only as a planner and fighter but as a leader of men. The hot chase after Doyle the despoiler of his island camp had led him far to the north and while Lee was sent his vigilant scouts to inquire of Col. Watson, whom he had escorted to the eastward in the jump, had been reinforced and was moving rapidly toward the Pedee to try the issue over again. There was still a third party in the half, that Marion, and at that hour the swamp band was the only armed body of patriots in South Carolina. Marion was anxious, if not perplexed. In a private interview with his faithful lieutenant, Major Harry he gave voice to his thoughts and desired to know whether, in the event of a fight, he compelled to take to the mountains, the officers and men of his band would share its fortunes and carry on the war. "Go, and bring me their answer!" he exclaimed to Horry.

The answer was soon returned and was a hearty "Ay, aye," over which, says Horry's chronicles, the "Swamp Fox" was "tipt off" and declared, "I am satisfied, one of these parties shall soon feel me."

Tradition says that the band was then drawn up in a circle and sworn with drawn swords to follow Marion, to never yield to the British, and to fight until liberty should be won.

The pursuit of Doyle was again taken up and Marion crossed Lynch's river to attack him but found that he had fled to Camden in a panic. Marion then turned to meet Watson and by rapid marching struck his camp on the Pedee. Watson had every advantage and Marion waited attack. The partisans had not two rounds of ammunition to a man.

In this crisis Marion's scouts brought news that an American army under Gen. Greene was entering South Carolina from the north and Light Horse Harry Lee was at hand with his legion to co-operate with Marion. The bivouac of the partisans was astir in a twinkling, boats were hauled from their secret hidings and Lee's horsemen were ferried across the Pedee to join forces with the swamp band. Watson also heard the news and imitated Doyle in a hasty retreat burning his stores and baggage and sinking his cannon in the swamps. Marion and Lee then marched against the British forts on the Santee capture Forts Watson and Motte and ultimately the fort of Granby, breaking the hold of the British upon the river line of defenses and forcing them back toward Charleston. This was the beginning of the end and [illegible] Santee until South Carolina was reclaimed for liberty.

How to Reduce English Pounds to Their Exact Equivalent in American Dollars

Multiply by 4.8665 and point off four places for cents and fractions thereof. Thus £13—13 x 4.8665 that is $63.26 and 65.100 of a cent. But for sterling exchange multiply by 4.87 in an ordinary New York market.

POOR TONY HART.

Death in an Insane Asylum Ended His Career.

RUINED BY "GOOD FELLOWSHIP."

He Knew He Would Enjoy Life and Followed His Motto with a Fatal Persistency—How He Became Famous as Edward Harrigan's Partner.

Poor Tony Hart! He was first a willful boy whose love for the stage pushed aside all obstacles. Then a minstrel. Then a character actor, whose growing art brought growing fame until, as Ed Harrigan's partner, he became at thirty-one of the best known men on the American stage—successful, rich and with a future before him full of bright promise. Then, suddenly, a cloud passed over his keen intellect.

A quarrel with Harrigan was followed by a break in the partnership and by individual ventures, each of which proved a new disaster. People did not know the real cause then—they called it ill luck. But before long the clear, musical voice became harsh and weak, the tongue refused to tell its owner's thoughts, and in a little while the thoughts themselves became disconnected and visionary. That was about three years ago, and marked the [illegible] for Tony Hart. Speech was gone, strength was gone, mind was gone. Only life, an often flickering and almost extinguished spark—was left. The other day that too went out, and Tony Hart was dead.

In his career lies a terrible warning. The secret of his downfall is in the motto he boasted of, "I will enjoy life while I have it." He thought he was enjoying it; but the dissipations that he called enjoyment brought parcels and parcels brought death. He lived up to his motto with fatal persistency. He enjoyed life too well; he enjoyed it in a way that meant disaster and insanity, and that killed him.

His real name was Anthony Cannon, and he was little more than thirty-five years old when he died. When he was a boy his parents lived in Worcester, Mass., and looked upon the sters as open gates to destruction. Perhaps that was why he hated the stage and everything that pertained to it. He soon escaped from the reformatory in which his father placed him and became a minstrel. Edward Harrigan joined the same troop as end man, and they became great friends. In 1871 they began working in partnership as Harrigan & Hart, singing "Little Fraud," in which Hart made up as a fresh faced, mellow voiced Dutch girl. They made a great hit with this song and other specialties and were in demand at big prices. In those days both men saved their money and before long they became managers of a variety theater in New York. Harrigan by this time had learned that he could write plays depicting New York life, which his patrons approved of, and they moved into another theater, where they played Harrigan's comedies for about half of each season, renting the theater during the rest of the time and themselves going on the road. "The Mulligan Guards" series, "A Squatter Sovereignty," "Cordelia's Aspirations" and "McSorley's Inflation," are the plays best remembered.

In December, 1884, their theater burned and they quarreled. They moved into another theater, but their old-time friendship was not renewed, and before long they broke partnership. Harrigan went on with his own plays, and has been uniformly successful. Hart tried to star, trying first "A Toy Pistol," then "Donnybrook" and then the leading role in Charles H. Hoyt's comic opera, "The Maid and the Moonshiner." Each of the pieces failed. Hart declared that an evil spell had been cast over him. He became terribly depressed and was an easy prey to the disease that had for several years been slowly developing and sapping his energy and talent.

TONY HART AS A WOMAN.

In 1882 he had married Gertie Granville, and they were very happy until he, as a result of his failing mind, began to treat her ill. She died about a year ago. At that time Tony had been in an insane asylum two years and was unable to understand that his wife was dead.

Tony Hart's downfall came from his love of good fellowship. His heart was always in the right place. When he had money it belonged to any one who wanted it, and he had hundreds of faithful friends up to the very last.

EDWARD MARSHALL.

AN ITALIAN PLAYWRIGHT.

He Wrote "La Dame de Challants" for Mme. Sarah Bernhardt.

Among the strangers that are within our gates is a famous foreign playwright. His name is Guiseppe Giacosa, and he came to America for the especial purpose of directing the production by Mme. Sarah Bernhardt of his latest play, "La Dame de Challants." Signor Giacosa was born in Piedmont forty-four years ago. He is one of the most distinguished of Italian dramatic poets.

GIUSEPPE GIACOSA.

The play which he has written for Mme. Bernhardt is taken from Italian history of the Sixteenth century. It tells a story full of love and intrigue, and concludes with a very dramatic scene. Both the hero and the heroine are in prison and are to die, the hero having killed a man in defense of the heroine's honor. A priest offers to aid her to escape, but as he will not also help her lover to freedom she refuses. If he is to die, she does not care to live. But when she is taken to the place of execution she finds that her hero has himself escaped by other means, and she dies alone.

It is said that the play gives Mme. Bernhardt totally remarkable opportunities to display her wonderful talent.

SHE DEFEATED KINGSTON.

Swift Marion C and Her Very Successful Turf Career.

One of the turf wonders of the west this season was Marion C, whose great victory over the famous eastern filly Kingston at Chicago Aug. 22 for the $10,000 Garfield stakes stamped her as one of the best thoroughbred mares at present in training in America. The contest, which was for all ages at a mile and a furlong, was hotly contested from start to finish. Marion C winning by a length in the fast time of 1:55. A few days later, however, the two great runners met again, and Kingston was victor.

MARION C.

Marion C is a 5 year old mare of chestnut color and rich blood lines. She is by Harry O'Fallon, sire of Terra Cotta and sire of Zuma, by a son of Lehigfellow. The blood of Lexington, Glencoe and Revenue also courses through Marion's veins. She was bred by S. P. Lancaster, of Bardstown, Ky., and first faced the starter in 3-year-old form. During her successful career she has defeated such swift runners as Almont, Catalpa, Verge d'Or, Rawlins, Ban Chief, Santiago, Donatello and Whitney.

How to Make Old Clothes Look New.

If a suit of clothes be of good material and be well made it can be made to last with some care a very long time and do a great share of service. It is best when clothes are not in use to fold them carefully and put them away where dust will not get at them. Hanging clothes in a wardrobe is not nearly so satisfactory. At the end of a season when a man lays aside an old suit he sees the shining elbows and the bulging knees and the grease spots here and there, and says to himself, "Well, this is the end of them!" Go slow, good man, have a little patience. Brush the old garments carefully; sponge out the grease spots with a little ammonia and then carefully fold up the old "duds" and lay them away. When the next season comes take them out, send them to be pressed and when they come back you will be surprised. The shining elbows no longer glisten in the light the knees are once more in shape and you have a suit of clothes almost as good as new—better than new, in that they have been tried and have been found trustworthy, not so good as new because, alas, you cannot go on performing this operation indefinitely.

Studying the Methods of Europeans.

"Prince Damrong" is a title that sounds like that of a character in comic opera; but he is a real prince and half brother of the king of Siam. This is, however, only his every day name; his full official title is Krom Mun Phudarit Damrongnuabhi, and he is a liberal—that is, he wants European methods introduced into Siam and is traveling among the Franks to get the hang of their system.

PRINCE DAMRONG.

He has just completed the tour of Great Britain, where he studied the public institutions with intelligent curiosity, and has gone to France to begin the tour of the Continent. He was born March 16, 1856, and became a progressive prince at an early age. He was the queen's guest at Balmoral. One of his specialties is a study of the educational systems of the countries he visits.

How the Turks Make Coffee.

The Turkish way of making coffee produces a very different result from that to which we are accustomed. A small conical saucepan with a long handle and calculated to hold about two tablespoonfuls of water is the vessel used. The fresh roasted berry is pounded, not ground, and about a dessertspoonful is put in the minute boiler; it is then nearly filled with water and thrust among the embers. A few seconds suffice to make it boil and the decoction, grounds and all, is poured out into a small cup which fits into a brass socket, much like the cup of an acorn and holding the china cup as that does the acorn itself. The Turks seem to drink this decoction boiling and swallow the grounds with the liquid. It is always taken plain, as sugar or cream would be thought to spoil it. Europeans after some practice prefer it to the clearer infusion made in France. In every hut these coffee boilers may be seen suspended, and the means for pounding the roasted berry are always ready at hand.

How to Check Vomiting.

An obstinate case of vomiting (that is, when the vomiting continues simply by convulsive retching after the original cause has ceased) may often be cured by drinking freely of water as hot as can be done. Seasickness in some people is greatly relieved by the same method.

AFTER THE STARTER.

A DEATHBED SCENE DESCRIBED BY LOUIS HARRISON.

He Was a Dying Race Track "Tout," and He Had "a Copper Lined Check" to Play on the Track That Day and No Time to Lose.

I have been [illegible] trying to print the following [illegible] of a deathbed scene which [illegible] recently. I had the description [illegible] in the doctor in attendance [illegible] left New York to commence his profession elsewhere, and I [illegible] decided to tell the story as he [illegible] it, suppressing all names.

The snow and sleet dashed through the dark, chilly atmosphere in wild waves. The wind moaned a dirge among the leafless trees. A solitary hackman, driven from his seat by the warring elements, had crowded himself inside his [illegible] looking vehicle and tipped upon the frost covered glass to attract the attention of belated night owls. Winter in its severest phase was upon us. In a dingy looking house on Fourth street a young man weak and emaciated tossed restlessly upon a bed.

He was a race track tout, and the great mental strain he had been subjected to for years in naming sure winners had left him an absolute wreck. His sunken cheeks, his eyes ablaze with fever and his entire pallor all denoted that he had but a few short hours to live. A professional nurse, with that cold, hospital stretcher expression they all possess, sat in a corner of the darkened room and whiled away the time by figuring how the undertaker would manage to get the coffin around that narrow turn in the stairs.

The doctor had been summoned, and when he rang the bell the tout waved his bony arms aloft and shrieked: "They're off! Tenny in a walk! Tenny gets all the money, and Salvator won't be one, two, six!"

THE TOUT'S EXIT.

He fell back on the bed exhausted as the doctor entered the room. The physician removed his greatcoat and the snow slowly melted from it.

"Doctor, this is a dreadful night. I suppose you are wet through?"

The tout regained consciousness and muttered: "The track will be heavy tomorrow, and I've got a copper riveted, lead pipe, copyrighted, air tight cinch. Firenze in the mud—she swims in it—She can make the pace so hot that the track will be dry before she does the first quarter."

The doctor approached the bed, and touching the patient's pulse said, "How do you feel?"

"Well, I'll tell you," he replied, "just how I feel about this.—The Dwyers stable is next to ours, and they tell me everything. Phil told me this morning that Blackjack would win in a canter. You see, the party that owns him wants to make a hogkilling, and no one knows that he's out for the coat."

Turning to the nurse the doctor inquired, "Have you notified his friends of his condition?" The tout started up and yelled: "Of course I have! I want to let 'em all in on the ground floor. Why, it's a little sure money. I saw him tried at daylight this morning. He made the first quarter in 0:24¼, the second in 0:07, and the third was so fast that it broke my stop watch and loosened three of my teeth. How can he lose it? Why, it's just like falling through the roof of a mint."

The doctor looked very serious and said, "He will be dead in an hour."

LOST BY A BREATH.

"Oh, no, he won't," the tout sneered. "There's not a dead one in the hunt. If any of 'em were stiff I'd know it. I tell you, Blackjack is full of Tabasco sauce, and he'll leave all them other plugs at the post. Why shouldn't he? Do you know his pedigree? Blackjack is out of Dark Lantern, by Blackwell's Island, and he's a born cracker."

The doctor felt his pulse again and sighed, "I can do no more; I must be going." The tout caught his arm and, drawing his head down close to the pillow, whispered: "After the Blackjack race meet me in the paddock. If you win I've got to give fifty dollars to the trainer, twenty-five to the jockey and twenty to the stable boys. I'll put what's left on the next race, and if the horse wins, you're in on it. So meet me in the paddock and I'll cash your ticket."

The doctor took the dying man's hand and said, "My poor boy, are you prepared to meet the Great Judge?" The tout gasped, "I don't want to meet the judge; the man I'm after is the stalker."

The physician pressed his attenuated hand, and, as the moisture gathered in his sympathetic eyes, said, "Now turn your face to the wall, my boy, and go to sleep." "I will," the tout muttered. "I'll get next to the rail, so that when I turn the corner they can't foul me. Here's a telegram I just received from the owner. There's 50 to 1 on Blackjack; get it quick before they cut it down. I'll win"

But he didn't. He quit in the stretch and lost by a breath.—Louis Harrison in New York Advertiser.

How to Oil a Harness.

Take a harness to a room where you can unbuckle it and separate the parts completely. Wash each part well in lukewarm water to which has been added a little potash. Scrub well with brush until all grease and dust have been removed. Wash the pieces well under the hand until they become supple. It won't do to oil until the harness becomes so. Let the parts dry in a place where they will do so slowly. When just moist, oil. For this purpose use codliver oil, as it is the best for the purpose. Besides, if you use neatsfoot, the rats and mice are your enemies at once, while they will not touch a harness oiled with codliver oil. Give a good dose of oil to all parts, then hang up to dry. When dry rub well with a soft rag.

A Word About Millet.

The common millet requires a dry, light and rich soil and grows from two and a half to four feet in height and may be sown broadcast about one bushel to the acre or in drills one-half less. Hungarian grass is a species of millet growing less rank and with smaller stalks. Both are annuals and require to be sown every season. On good, well prepared soils millet furnishes an abundant crop of green forage, and for this purpose may be cut during its various stages of growth. The seeds are fine and not well adapted to heavy soils. There are several varieties, but the common millet, the golden and Hungarian grass are the ones most usually grown. Like the corn plant, it requires a warm soil and warm weather for its best growth, and should not be sown until these conditions prevail. In its green state it has a nutritive value equal to timothy grass, but if left until the seeds are ripened the stalks become hardened and their nutritive value is less; consequently it is better to cut it for hay before the seeds are ripe and there will be less danger from overfeeding the ripened seed. It is cultivated chiefly for soiling, or as a supplemental crop when the meadows are light or the corn crop thin. It can also be cut and cured while the weather is warm. While many of the annual plants are valuable for forage, none are in all respects equal to timothy and other perennial grasses for hay.

Horsehair Snakes.

There is a current belief in almost every community, especially in farming districts, where people have a better chance to observe such things, that horsehairs are capable of being converted into snakes. The question has often been discussed, but still there are many fortunes about the matter that may not prove uninteresting. To be sure, the root of the hair must be with it or it will not take on a living, snake like existence, as some claim it really does under certain conditions.

In muddy, tepid water the hair, through its roots, in accordance with the law of life by the law of affinity, absorbs vitalizing elements the same as it did when on the animal. And the sensitiveness of the hair being animal as well as vegetable life, it naturally more or less sensitive to the touch. For more than a quarter of a century the evolutionist has laid more or less stress upon this horsehair snake phenomena, but the whole argument has but little weight from the evolutionist's standpoint, as there is no reproduction among these "snakes," without reproduction their whole myth is a delusion.—St. Louis Republic.

Cincinnati's Inclined Planes.

The city of Cincinnati has in all two planes, one called the "Bottom," 60 feet, and the other 112 feet, above low water mark in the river. Thus, with the exception of New York and Boston, is the most densely populated area in the Union. Owing to the contracted dimensions of the plans, population is rapidly extending on to the river hills. These are nearly 400 feet above the city, and take one on to the general level of the country. Besides roads leading to their summits, there are in all four inclined railway places on the north, east and west—where by stationary engines at the top people are taken up, sometimes nearly a hundred in a car, and in ninety seconds. They are hauled up by a wire rope large as one's wrist, which winds around a drum with a monotonous humming sound, quick resounding, as though in a hurry to get you up. An extra rope is attached to each car as a precaution in case the one in use should break.—Howe's Historical Collections of Ohio.

How to Shave Easily.

The moment you get out of bed is the best time. Your beard will never be so pliable after you are around awhile. First wash your beard well with soap and cold water. Rain water is better, of course. Then apply lather plentifully and cold as a rule. But if your razor is cold, close it and place it in your pocket or under your arm till it gets warm. Like other edged tools, the razor is only a very fine saw, and therefore it is better to move it a little endways as you shave rather than with a straight, broad sweep. If you always shave in one direction around your face the beard will soon get a permanent "set" in that direction, the effect of which is well, a matter of taste.

BEAUTIFUL OKLAHOMA.

The exciting incidents of the two great invasions of Oklahoma territory by home-seekers, April 22, 1889 and September 22nd, 1891, have given that section deserved prominence as a place in which to cheaply obtain one of Uncle Sam's farms. The lands recently opened are located in the Old Iowa, Sac and Fox and Pottawattomie reservations lying directly east of Guthrie and Oklahoma City, on the A. T. & S. F. R. R. They now constitute counties "A" and "B" with Chandler and Tecumseh as respective county seats—both large and rapidly growing towns. Claims can be bought at reasonable figures. For the raising of corn, cotton, wheat and fruit, Oklahoma is unexcelled.

Write to G. T. Nicholson, G. P. & T. A., Topeka, Kas., or J. P. Hall, Colorado Passenger Agent, Denver, Colorado, for a specially prepared folder giving full information relative to Beautiful Oklahoma."

Royal Baking Powder Is Superior to Every Other.

It is a scientific fact that the Royal Baking Powder is absolutely pure. . . . I will go still further and state that because of the facilities that company have for obtaining perfectly pure cream of tartar, and for other reasons dependent upon the proper proportions of the same, and the method of its preparation, the Royal Baking Powder is undoubtedly the purest and most reliable baking powder offered to the public.

A WINTER IN THE SOUTH.

A winter in the South—the very words conjure up delicious memories for those who have been there. The bright sunny skies, the dry bracing air and the warm sunshine is in decided contrast to the cold bleak North.

The great state of Texas is celebrated as one great broad winter resort in itself, but the following places are, perhaps, particularly popular: Fort Worth, with its mineral baths, healthful climate and good hotels; Austin, the beautiful Capital City; San Antonio, one of the few really historical places in our country; Houston, with its blooming lawns, oleanders and stores of orange and lemon, and Galveston with its delicious sea breezes. These are but a few of the delightful resorts of this highly favored region.

An escape from all the pains and discomforts of our rigorous weather, transported by magic from the region of snow and ice, to the fragrance of this sunny land, is now made possible and easy by the Direct Texas & Ft. Worth Branch of the Union Pacific System, which runs through Pullman Palace Sleepers between Denver, Ft. Worth, Dallas, Shreveport and New Orleans, and offers exceedingly low excursion rates to all Southern cities from Denver, Pueblo, Colorado Springs and Trinidad. For a full description of Southern winter resorts, reached over the Union Pacific System, or for excursion rates, apply to W. G. Rice, Union Pacific Ticket agent, office 11 Pike's Peak avenue, for a copy of the Union Pacific Winter Tours Folder.

PARLOR CARS.

Our citizens who have not tried the new parlor cars on the afternoon Santa Fe trains should do so. The cars are indeed parlors and the engine is comfortable as the best parlor car, not to be compared with the ordinary chair cars; something entirely new. Trains carrying them leave for Pueblo at 10.45 a. m and for Denver at 4.55 p.m.

A FEW REASONS

Why the "WABASH" is the most desirable route for all points East.

First—You can purchase through tickets for all Eastern points at any coupon ticket office in the west over this line taking your choice of routes to the Missouri River.

Second—You can go by the way of Omaha or Kansas City at your pleasure.

Third—From either of these points you can have your choice of "FIVE" distinct routes as follows:

Via the Hannibal Air Line, which is the short line to the East.

Via St. Louis, where close connection is made with all Eastern and Southeastern routes.

Via Chicago, the World's Fair City some times called "the windy city."

Via Toledo, Ohio's gem, at inland city, connecting at that place with the Lake Shore fast trains to the East.

Via Detroit, Michigan's prettiest and most beautiful city where Eastern lines connect closely.

All of the above named points are reached direct only by the "WABASH" and direct by no other line running from the West.

Ask for your tickets by the way of this line, and accept of them by no other.

We run the finest trains on earth, a bold assertion but a cold fact. Write me for rates, maps, etc.
